

Revitalize the old house

The original condition of the building was an old two-story brick dormitory. After being taken back by the owner, it was converted into a residential space with the aim of liberating the old-fashioned exterior and interior space, and revitalizing the old building became the theme of this design.

The exterior was constructed with hollow bricks, pebbles, and grey aluminum grilles, outlining a 10-meter long, 6-meter high building facade. The overall color tone maintains a consistent coordination with the surrounding environment, constructing a modern home that is transparent yet maintains privacy. The most concise design lines were used to present the most authentic desires for life.

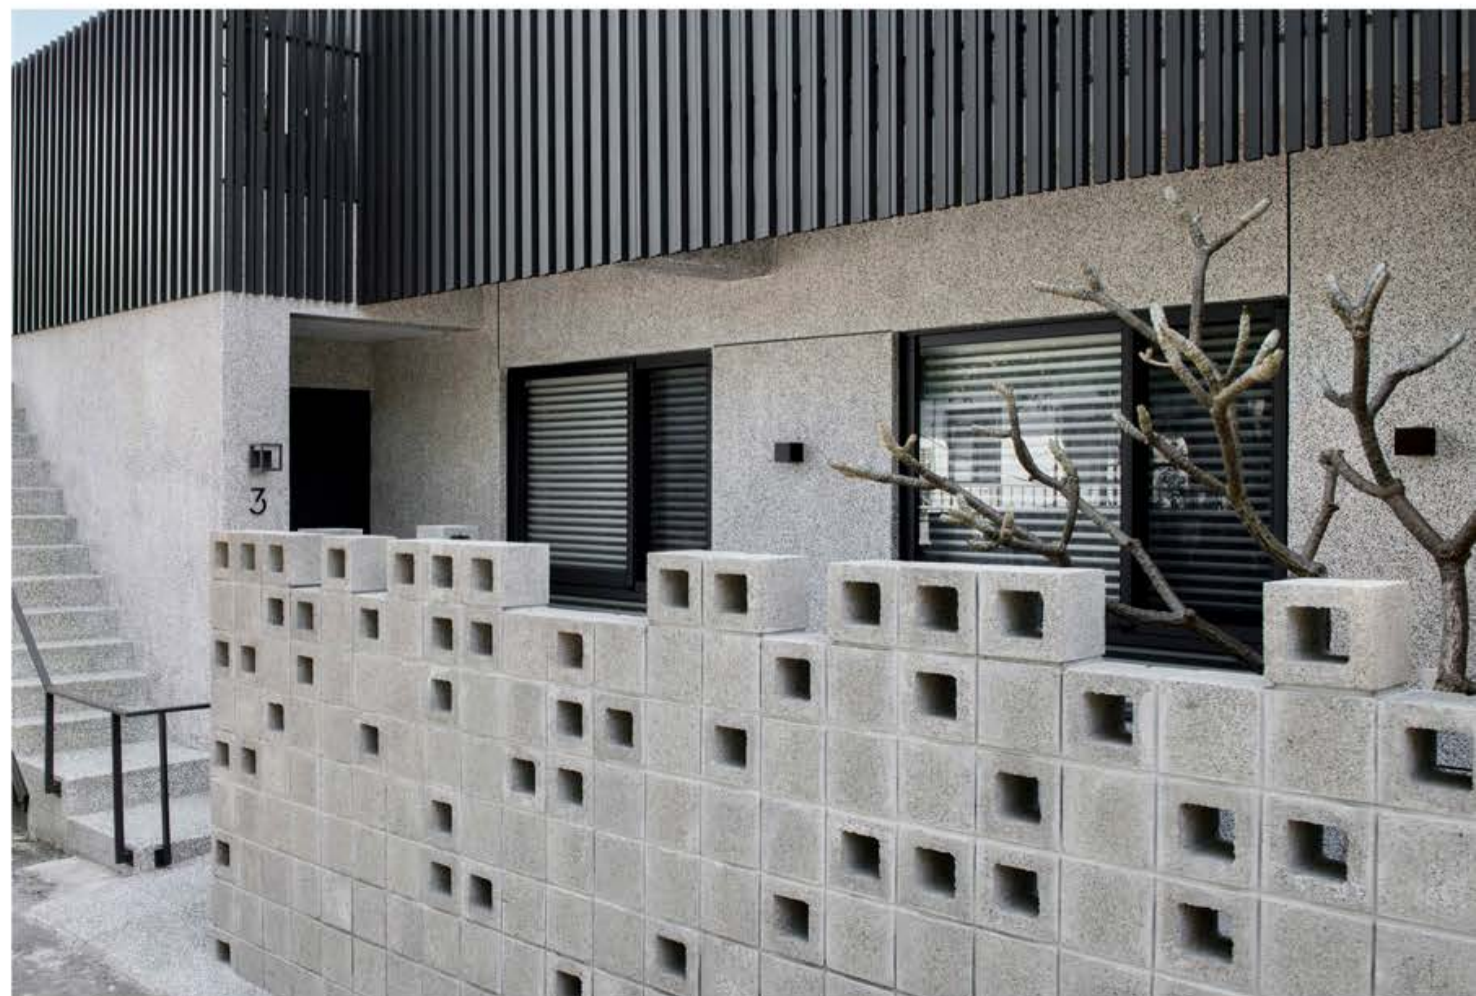

The first floor uses a return-shaped flow to create an open space that looks more transparent and has a sense of ceremony. The second floor is a private space for the family's living area, with a space for work, reading, and communication, creating another living space that enhances parent-child emotions. The use of earthy colors, wood, and stone materials and colors creates a warm and elegant atmosphere, reflecting the refinement of life from simplicity and comfort, creating a subtle and introverted living environment
